

ABSTRACT

Techniques for generating portions of a web environment provide for an automated or semi-automated generation of a web site. A user interface adapted to allow a user to configure parameters relating to a set of predefined components for a web environment is presented. Data defining the parameters for the web environment is received. At least a portion of the web environment is automatically generated based on the received data, and the generated web environment includes components specified by the parameters.

90061265.doc